CHAPTER 32

Medicine Is Not A Minor Art

醫非小道記三十二

予出中年, 嘗遊東藩之野遇異人焉, 偶相問曰: 子亦學醫道耶? 醫道難矣, 子其慎之。予曰: 醫雖小道, 而性命是關, 敢不知慎, 敬當聞命。

After reaching middle age, I once travelled in the wilderness of the eastern vassal state, <sup>821</sup> where I encountered an extraordinary person. By chance, he asked me, "Are you also studying the art of medicine? The art of medicine is difficult, you must attend it with care."

I responded, "Even though the medicine is a minor art, 823 it is the key to the inner nature and life. How dare I act without caution? Respectfully, I shall heed your advice."

 $<sup>^{821}</sup>$ "東 藩 eastern vassal state" most likely refers to the Joseon Kingdom (Korea), as it is historically a tributary state to the Míng dynasty and Zhāng Jǐngyuè is known to have travelled there. Other possibilities are the Ryukyu Kingdom (Okinawa Islands) or the general northeastern region of China, both are also called 東藩 eastern vassal state from time to time.

&lt;sup>822</sup> This is reminiscent of Zhū Dānxī's last words to his son, "醫學亦難矣, 汝謹 識之。The study of medicine is difficult, you must carefully remember this." as recorded in "故丹溪先生朱公石表辭 Funeral Ballad for the Late Master Dānxī, the Respected Elder Zhū" in the Dānxī Xīnfǎ.

<sup>823 &</sup>quot;小道 minor art" comes from 論語子張 the Analects: "Zǐ Zhāng" (c. 4th century BCE), "雖小道, 必有可觀者焉, 致遠恐泥, 是以君子不為也。 Even in minor arts, there is something worth being looked at; however, when one attempts to reach a far [goal], there is a danger that one may be restrained by them. Therefore, the noble ones do not practice them." For this, Zhū Xī 朱熹 (1130–1200 CE) notes, "小道,如農園醫卜之屬。 The minor arts are the likes of agriculture, gardening, 異人怒而叱曰: 子非知醫者也! 既稱性命是關, 醫豈小道云哉? 夫性命 之道,本乎太極散于萬殊,有性命然後三教立,有性命然後五倫生。故 造化者, 性命之爐冶也。道學者, 性命之絕墨也。醫藥者, 性命之贊育也。 然而其義深其肯博,故不有出人之智,不足以造達微妙。不有執中之明, 不足以辨正毫釐。使能明醫理之綱目,則治平之道如斯而已。能明醫理 之得失, 則興亡之機如斯而已。能明醫理之緩急, 則戰守之法如斯而已。 能明醫理之趨舍,則出處之義如斯而已。洞理氣於胸中,則變化可以指 計。運陰陽於掌上,則隔垣可以目窺。修身心於至誠實儒家之自治,洗業 障于持戒誠釋道之自醫。身心人已理通於一,明於此者必明於彼。善乎 彼者,必善於斯。故曰:必有真人而後有真知。必有真知而後有真醫,醫 之為道豈易言哉? 若夫尋方逐跡齪齪庸庸, 椒硫殺疥, 菊薤散風, 誰曰 非醫也? 而緇衣黄冠總稱釋道, 矯言偽行何匪儒流? 是泰山之與丘垤, 河海之與行潦, 固不可以同日語矣。又若陰陽不識虛實悞攻, 心粗膽大 執抝偏庸,非徒無益而反害之之徒。殆又椒硫菊薤之不若,小道之稱且 不可當, 又烏足與言醫道哉! 醫道難矣! 醫道大矣! 是誠神聖之首傳, 民 命之先務矣。吾子其毋以草木相渺,必期進於精神相貫之區,玄冥相通 之際, 照終始之後先, 會結果之根蒂, 斯於斯道也。其庶乎為有得矣。子 其勉之! 子其勉之!

The extraordinary person became angry and shouted, "You are not someone who understands the medicine! Since you claimed that [the medicine] is the key to the inner nature and life, how can the medicine be a minor art as you have mentioned? For the way of the inner nature and life, it is rooted in the supreme polarity<sup>824</sup> and it is disseminated to the ten thousand different [manifestations]. With the inner nature and life present, subsequently, there is the establishment of the three teachings. With the inner nature and life present, subsequently, there is the beginning of the five cardinal relationships. 826 medicine, and divination."

<sup>824</sup> I.e. tàijí 太極.

<sup>825</sup> I.e. Confucianism, Daoism, and Buddhism.

<sup>826</sup> From 孟子滕文公上 Mèngzǐ: "Téng Wén Gōng I" (c. 3rd century BCE), it is stated, "聖人有憂之,使契為司徒,教以人倫,父子有親,君臣有義,夫婦有別,長幼有序,朋友有信。 As the sage worried about it, he appointed Xiè as the Minister of the Masses to teach the relations of humanity, so that, between father and son, there should be affection; between sovereign and minister, righteousness;

Thus, the nature's creation is the smelting furnace of the inner nature and life. The study of the Dao is the rules and regulations<sup>827</sup> of the inner nature and life. The medicine is what assists and fosters the inner nature and life. Nevertheless, its concept is profound and its intent is broad; thus, without an extraordinary wisdom, it is insufficient to access its subtlety and ingenuity; without the impartial clarity, it is insufficient to identify and rectify deviations as minute as a fine hair's width.

When one is able to clarify the headropes<sup>828</sup> and outlines of the medical principle, the art of governing and bringing peace<sup>829</sup> is the same as such. When one is able to clarify the merits and faults within the medical principle, the mechanism of [a nation's] rising and falling is the same as such. When one is able to clarify whether [a disease] is urgent or non-urgent by the medical principle, the tactics of warring and defending is the same as such. When one can clarify whether to accept or reject [others' opinions] according to the medical principle, the concept of the origin<sup>830</sup> is the same as such.

By penetrating the principle within one's chest, [all] transmutations and transformations can be calculated by one's fingers. By wielding yīn and yáng within one's palm, one is able to see what is behind the wall.<sup>831</sup> Cultivating the body and mind with the utmost between husband and wife, separate duties; between old and young, a proper order; and between friends, fidelity."

<sup>827</sup> Lit. "carpenter's straight-line marker."

<sup>828</sup> For 網 headrope, see footnote 84.

 $<sup>^{829}</sup>$  I.e. this is alluding to Zēng Zǐ 曾子's "國治而後天下平 By governing the state well, all under the heavens will be able to enjoy peace." See footnote 485.

 $<sup>^{830}</sup>$  I.e. by understanding the medical principle and developing a critical mindset, one's clinical reasoning is close to that of the canonical literature.

<sup>831</sup> This is a specific reference to Biǎn Què 高鵲 from 史記高鵲倉公列傳 Records of the Grand Historian: "Biography of Biǎn Què and Cāng Gōng" (94 BCE), where it is recorded that after Biǎn Què took Chángsāng Jūn 長桑君's secret formula for thirty days, "視見垣一方人。以此視病,盡見五藏癥結。 he was then able to see the person behind a wall. With this vision, he was able to see the concretions and binds of the five zàng-viscera."

sincerity, this is truly the way of self-governing by the Confucians; cleansing one's karmic hindrance with the observance of precepts, this is truly the way of self-healing by the Buddhists and Daoists. For the mind and body, others and oneself, all principles converge at one [source]. By understanding this [principle] within oneself, one will certainly understand it in other people; by being adept at [treating] others, one will certainly be adept at [treating] oneself.

Therefore, it is said, "There must first be the Realized Ones before there can be true knowledge."832 Likewise, there must first be true knowledge before there can be the true medicine. For the medicine as an art, how could it be expounded so easily? Just like those who search for formulae and pursue the vestige, who are overly cautious and mediocre, [knowing only to] dispatch scabies with peppers and sulfur as well as disperse wind with scallions and shallots, would anyone deny their identities as physicians? Whenever [people wear] black robes and yellow caps, others call them Buddhists and Daoist [priests].833 Whenever people are pretentious in speech and hypocritical in conduct, how could they be anything but Confucians? $^{834}$  Just like comparing Mount Tài $^{835}$  to small hills and mounds, comparing great rivers and seas to the flowing water

<sup>832</sup> From 莊子內篇大宗師 Zhuāngzǐ Inner Chapters: "The Great Ancestral Master" (c. 3rd century BCE).

 $<sup>^{833}</sup>$  "緇衣 black robes" are worn by both Buddhist monastic members and devotees who have taken the three refuges. They are also worn by Daoist practitioners. "黄冠 yellow caps" are worn exclusively by Daoist priests.

<sup>834</sup> Note: This sarcastic statement may require explanation, as it is a bit difficult to understand without the context. In short, it is saying that people often misidentify those with superficial knowledge of medicine as physicians, just as they frequently assume whoever wearing religious attire to be religious members, or they wrongly associate any hypocrite to be a Confucian. This is asking the existential question of what constitutes a person of faith; is it about the external attire and what they talk about, or is it about the internal learning and cultivation? To be a physician, is it simply the act of prescribing medicine, or is it something more internal and deeper?

 $<sup>^{835}</sup>$  泰山 Mount Tài is one of the holiest mountains in Chinese culture. It is where emperors throughout history held elaborate ceremonies to pay homage to the heavens and earth after their ascension to the throne. Later on, it also became a sacred site for both Daoist and Buddhist practitioners.

on the roadside, undoubtedly, they cannot be mentioned in the same breath.836

Furthermore, if they attack by mistake due to the inability to recognize the yīn and yáng, or if they are careless, reckless, stubborn, obstinate, biased, and mediocre, then not only will they fail to bring any benefit, but they will also be the ones who bring harm to the people instead. Most likely, they are even more inferior than [those who understand how to use] pepper, sulfur, scallions, and shallots. As they are already unworthy of bearing the title of [practicing] the minor art, are they even qualified to be instructed in the art of medicine?

The art of medicine is difficult! The art of medicine is vast! This is truly something that was first transmitted by the divine sages, as it is the paramount matter regarding people's lives.

My friend, you should not regard [the art of medicine] as insignificant as mere grass and wood. You must expect yourself to work diligently to reach the state where your essence and spirit are linked together, to the realm where the mysterious profundity is interlinked; [so that you may] illuminate the beginning and the end of what is at present and what is from the origin, and reunite with the fruit-bearing root and stalk; only then will you arrive at this Dao,<sup>837</sup> so that you will attain the knowledge. You need to strive for it! You must strive for it!"

予聞是教, 慚悚應諾, 退而皇皇者數月, 恐失其訓因筆記焉。

After I heard his instruction, with shame and angst, I promised that I would undertake [his instruction]. Nevertheless, I avoided [thinking about] it, as I was in great anxiety for several months. Since I was afraid that I would forget about his admonishment, I later recorded it in writing.

<sup>836</sup> Lit. "one must not speak of the two things on the same day."

<sup>837</sup> Alt. trans. "as such, you have arrived in our path/profession."